1. The special construction bureau which had been transferred to Neuruppin in 1952 was disbanded during the first half of July 1953. Its missions have since been taken over by the special construction bureau in Fuerstenberg. The construction projects previously supervised by the Neuruppin special construction bureau are now under the supervision of the following construction offices:

Neuruppin airfield	Neuruppin construction office
Rechlin airfield	Rechlin construction office
Wittstock airfield	Rechlin construction office
Trollenhagen airfield	Fuerstenberg construction office
Pinow airfield	Eberswalde construction office

After the Neuruppin special construction bureau was dissolved, the Koch agencies of the respective districts were charged with the individual construction projects, irrespective of whether they were air force or army projects. The Koch agency in Wittstock was also disbanded.

25X1 2. [REDACTED] the special construction bureau in Neuruppin, which employed Germans and was under the control of some Soviet majors, was being disbanded.

25X1 1. Comment. The special construction bureau in Neuruppin was previously subordinate to the air force Koch agency in Wittstock. Information tends to indicate that, in addition to the Koch agency in Wittstock, the Koch in Mittenberg and Werder, which were under the direct control of the Soviet Air Force, will also be dissolved. A special construction bureau is assigned to each Koch agency. After the Koch agency in Wittstock and its special construction bureau in Neuruppin had been dissolved, the remaining construction office in Neuruppin was subordinate to the special construction bureau in Fuerstenberg, which is assigned to the Koch in Fuerstenberg.
